Message from the President

Aubrey Nash

Message From the President March 2019

Happy New Year! As I am sitting here writing this greeting, I am watching the Westminster dog show, and congratulations to all the winners! There were several very nice miniatures in each variety lineup. Juniors just finished. I was glad to see three dachshunds, one miniature, in the Juniors ring. One of them even made the first cut. Congratulations to all three juniors, they did very well. We need to encourage our young people to get in the ring as they are the future of dog showing.

Let me encourage everybody to use the Digest to the fullest and advertise those wins. Photos and pedigrees are helpful to those that might be interested in your breeding program and can be part of your ad. You can't go wrong getting those winning pictures advertised in the Digest. Remember the Digest is seen by all hound group judges and your dog deserves to be seen. Hollie, the Digest editor is great to work with and very helpful with those ads.

The winter has been hard on many of you, but the spring season is just around the corner and so is the DCA National show. It will be held at Purina Farms this year and all the dates and events are printed on the DCA website. My understanding is the host hotel is fully booked but they have a waiting list in case somebody cancels. So, if you are interested in staying at the host hotel call and get your name on the waiting list. Come on out and support our parent Club. I will be there and will be looking for you.

Thanks go out to Shelly Baldwin for accepting the task of taking on the NMDC website. This will be a great help and we look forward to working with her.

Just as a reminder, if you have any questions, ideas, or want information contact any one of our board members. We are here to support you and thank you for your support.

Until next time, be good to one another and share those positive thoughts.

Presentation versus Performance

Great handling can win dog shows and so can brilliant grooming, so, which is the most important?

If a poorly presented dog flies into the ring with every sinew oozing breed type with carriage straight out of the standard and completes their entrance by coming to a perfect halt quivering with animation, is it more likely to win over the dog that is immaculately put down, in superb physical condition with its coat glistening but plays up the whole time it's in the ring?

Yes, you're right; it depends on the degree of poor presentation versus the poor performance, but it does present an interesting comparison.

Many exhibitors spend inordinate amounts of time on presentation yet do not expend anywhere near the same amount of effort on their dog's performance. Many exhibitors, of long-haired breeds in particular, become so fanatical about the coat that they forget the overall purpose and function of the dog. They stress out over a single hair being out of place so much so that the preparation time dedicated to ring performance is frequently sacrificed. In fact, many exhibitors of all breeds are quite content to have their dogs behave badly so long as they look immaculate. In my experience, I would suggest that the prevailing wisdom is that it is far more acceptable for a dog to win on presentation regardless of performance than the other way round.

Don't get me wrong, presentation is important – these are, after all, show dogs. However, if we are going to put that much work into our dog's presentation, then we owe it to ourselves to put at least as much effort into their performance. And by effort, I don't mean pushing and pulling our dog about the ring, but training them to do what we can't – run, stand and exude their mandated breed characteristics in a show-stopping performance.

The ultimate performing show dog is the one that appears to be carrying out all of the required ring maneuvers without being forced, pulled, prodded or generally fiddled with. If a dog isn't 'showing' based on their own free will, then all the grooming in the world won't turn the dog into a major winner. The most successful show dogs are those who exhibit their breed characteristics on the move with a freedom that gives the observer the impression that the dog is doing 'it' all by itself.

Handling dogs to a show-winning performance is easy once you understand how to have your dog do exactly what you want, when you want it. All you have to do is learn how to communicate with them through words (sound), actions (sight), and feel (touch) what it is that you want them to do in keeping with the temperament, bearing and carriage specific to their breed. It's only when we fail to provide these clear lines of communication that our dogs become confused and behave accordingly.

On the other hand, no matter how well a dog exhibits all of its breed characteristics in a physical sense, if the presentation does not complement this, it will not win either. Presentation encompasses the whole overall look and condition of the dog. This includes coat and muscle and applies equally to smooth and long coated breeds alike.

So, when it comes to asking whether presentation or performance is more important, the answer of course is both. Just remember – especially if you have a long-haired breed: "To avoid frustration aim for excellence not for perfection – you can achieve excellence, but rarely can you achieve perfection".

The Movie Star's Dachshund Hero

September 21, 2017
National Purebred Dog Day[®]

In the first month of 1958, a little Dachshund named, "Blackie" started barking his head off at 3 a.m. The lady of the house, "Pilar," grabbed her 20-month-old daughter from her crib and flew out of the burning house into the night, but not before suffering a burn on the arm. Firemen were able to save furs and jewelry, but pretty much all the clothes, furniture, and personal belongings were lost. Most of the second floor of the house was destroyed or damaged.

House fires don't discriminate, and this is a story that repeats itself every year. Not everyone is as lucky as Blackie's family was, but the man of that house, out of town on business at the time, knew exactly how lucky he was. When actor, John Wayne returned from Japan where he'd been filming "The Barbarian and the Geisha," he gave "Blackie" a hero's medal.

Mrs. Wayne stroked the head of her pet Dachshund as she told the "Spokesman Review," how "Blackie's" barking alerted her to the fire that swept the second story of the actor's $250,000 mansion. "We owe our lives to Blackie," she said.

"My little dog Blackie barked and jumped up on the bed. I jumped up and saw some fire, not too much, as the edge of the carpet. I took the baby from her crib to a safe place downstairs. Then I went back up with a fire extinguisher. But all of a sudden –whoosh- the fire just burst across the rugs and the records in the record player went up, poof, like an explosion. I couldn't stay up there any longer and I ran back downstairs."

She and the baby took refuge in the caretaker's cottage. From there she sent two wires to her husband. One asked simply, "How do you like one-story houses?" the other (signed Blackie) said: "I guess I'm a Peruvian national hero, but all I did was wake up Mommie and say, 'Get me out of this house.'"

Said Mrs. Wayne, "Blackie always sleeps on my bed, and he always will."
