Message

from the President

Laura A Licht

Hi NMDC members!

I hope you all had a blessed Thanksgiving.

December brings chilly temperatures, peppermint hot cocoa (my fave !), poopcicles (you know what I'm sayin'), and of course, Christmas. Now, I'm one of THOSE people. I listen to Christmas music from Halloween to New Year's Day. I like Christmas sweaters (even ugly ones), and Hallmark movies. Most of all I love the special church services. They ground me and help me focus on what's really important. So that is my Christmas wish for you... Faith, Family, Friends.

Before you know it our National will be here, and we plan to put the "Special" in Specialty since it will be our 45th show. Look in this issue for the details we have so far.

Also, don't forget to renew your membership! We need you! I hope that you like what we are doing so far by connecting with you. Look for more email blasts. In the coming months there will be changes to the By-Laws which will need your vote, a poll about NMDC Championships, and other opportunities for you to be involved. Remember, we have a Facebook fan page and website (www.nmcdachshund.org) which also has a blog and is more interactive. Also, advertise your beautiful Miniatures! This Digest not only goes to you, but all of the AKC Dachshund and Hound judges. That type of exposure is a good thing!

Stay safe, respect one another, and give your Miniature Dachshunds lots of hugs! Have a very Merry Christmas and Happy New Year!

Sasha needed a major to finish but hated the ring so instead of pursuing those last points we took up scentwork. She is trained to detect the odors of birch, anise, clove, and cypress. In the picture she has found the correct container from twenty assorted boxes and bags. When she stops sniffing and looks back at me I know she's found it. She is currently competing at the masters level.

Kraków's Dachshund Parade

National Purebred Dog Day® <https://nationalpurebreddogday.com/>

Every autumn since 1994, the Polish city of Kraków has hosted “Marsz Jamników” – the Dachshund Parade – in which hundreds of Dachshunds (some in costume) come from all over the world to participate. The parade first began in 1973, but leave it to Communists to spoil a good thing. The parade was banned by Communist authorities who thought it was reeked of anti-establishment sentiment. When Communism fell in Poland, the event was reintroduced.

Jamnik is the Polish word for Dachshund, and in addition to being a popular pet in Poland, there are certain Polish things that are associated with Jamniki. Under Soviet rule, for instance, mass-development of standardized tower blocks (read: ugly) in park-like settings were built using structural insulated panels in short order. One building constructed in 1973 is a 1,667 foot long building nicknamed Jamnik for its “Dachshund-like” length. Fans of the British Brit alternative rock band, Travis, might recognize the building as it was included in their “Love Will Come Through” music video.

Another reference can be found on Kraków's Solaris Urbino 18 articulated buses used for public transport. A Varsovian jamnik – or green Warsaw Dachshund – logo is pasted onto the left-hand corner and is supposed to symbolize the low-floor feature of the bus, a boon to the elderly and handicapped. The Dachshund’s “greenness” is a reference to the company’s environmental commitment.

When Pope John Paul II visited Poland in 1975, he was driven to the Częstochowa cathedral in another famous jamnik, an extended version of the Polski Fiat 125p, a Polish car manufactured from the late 60s to the 90s under license from the Italian company Fiat. It was a state-of-the-art car in the late sixties, and was to substitute the Warszawa, which by that time, was an obsolete design.

But what’s up with Dachshunds and Poles?

Some say that the breed showed up in Kraków over 500 years ago, and as of a few years ago, the Dachshund was the most commonly seen breed in the city of Kraków. The parade may have started out as a local “tip-of-the-hat,” but it has grown into an international parade: In 2014, the “King” of the Parade came from Galicia, but his “Queen” came in from Tennessee.

The Dachshies begin their parade at Floriańska Gate, and walk down the “Royal Route” in front of the 15th-century Kraków Barbican, an old fortified outpost that was once connected to the city walls. They pass by St. Mary’s Basilica, then enter Main Market Square (described by the TV travel show, Lonely Planet, to be Europe’s most beautiful square) where the finalists demonstrate a certain set of “royal qualities” to the panel of judges. These include the “distinctive walk,” an “elegant sit,” and “noble temperament.” The winner of the costume contest is also announced on the special stage.

to all our their families!

Dachshund Club!

Mange in Dogs: What You Need to Know

By Mara Bovsun

What Is Mange?

Mange refers to skin diseases caused by mites. The term is derived from a French word mangeue, which translates into “to eat or itch.” Mange, caused by different kinds of mites, affects many kinds of animals, including humans.

In dogs, there are two major forms of mange, each caused by different mites:

Sarcoptic Mange (also known as scabies)

Demodectic Mange (also known as red mange or demodex)

Sarcoptic Mange

Also known as canine scabies, this disease is caused by a circular-shaped, eight-legged mite called the Sarcoptes scabiei. This form of mange is highly contagious. The parasite can be transmitted from dog to dog and can pass from dogs to humans, although it doesn't thrive on non-canine hosts. Female mites burrow into the skin to lay their eggs. The eggs hatch in about three weeks, and the young feed on the host's skin.

Symptoms of Sarcoptic Mange

Symptoms will generally appear about 10-days-to-8-weeks after contact with a dog carrying scabies. Typically, the first signs of the infection will be on the margins of the ears, chest, elbows, hocks, and belly. Untreated, they can quickly spread. The most common symptoms of sarcoptic mange include:

Extreme itchiness

Redness and rash

Thick yellow crusts

Hair loss

Bacteria and yeast infections

Thickening of the skin (advanced cases)

Lymph node inflammation (advanced cases)

Emaciation (extreme cases)
How Is Sarcoptic Mange Diagnosed?

A veterinarian will take one or more skin scrapings and look under a microscope for the presence of eggs or mites. Sometimes, however, no mites appear in the skin samples although the symptoms strongly suggest an infestation.

Demodectic Mange

Demodectic mange, or demodex, is caused by a cigar-shaped mite, Demodex canis. The difference from sarcoptic mange is that these are a normal part of the skin flora, always present, and usually harmless. They are passed to pups from their mothers in the first few days after birth, but it is not contagious to humans. The mites take up residence deep in hair follicles and stay there, causing no trouble. A normal immune system keeps their numbers in check. But in a dog with a weakened immune system, they can grow out of control. Dogs at risk of demodectic mange include:

Puppies who inherit a weakness in their immune systems will be prone to a particularly serious form of demodex, known as juvenile onset.

Young healthy dogs may develop some patches of demodex, which sometimes go away on their own or with localized topical treatment.

Elderly, sick, neglected, or stray dogs with weakened immune systems often develop demodex. For example, cancer or diabetes can impair immune function and lead to this form of mange.

Symptoms of Demodectic Mange

In localized cases, it shows up as patches of hair loss and red, scaling skin.

In generalized cases, the entire body may be covered with redness, infections, scaling, swelling, and crusts. Often the dog loses most, if not all, hair.

Diagnosis of Demodectic Mange

Your veterinarian will take a skin scraping and look for mites under a microscope.

Treatment of Mange In Dogs

Both scabies and demodex will require treatments to heal the skin and control the mites. Some people are tempted to treat the condition without expert guidance, but it's prudent to see a veterinarian because even a mild case can grow quickly. Treatments for both forms of mange include several strategies:

Hair clipping

Dipping to cleanse and heal skin:

Baths in medicated shampoos on a weekly basis will help heal and soften skin.

Mite eradication and control: Topical applications of compounds to kill the mites, such as selamectin and imidacloprid-moxidectin formulations, over a period of several weeks have been shown to be effective. Oral treatments are also sometimes used.
